Diana Miranda is one of today's greatest interpreters of Brazilian music of the 90s. She grew up in the North-Eastern part of Brazil and by osmosis absorbed the North-Eastern Brazilian and African rhythms and pop music. Today, she expresses in her songs, a rich musical blend. She is a singer who is vibrant and joyous and communicates her passion for her music, to the public, in her movements and her body language. Her first album, 'Diana Miranda', is an eclectic collection of 100% original Brazilian compositions, acclaimed by the critics.

Invitations flowed in for Diana to appear at some of the famous musical events in Europe. Among them, Montreux Jazz Festival where Diana became famous almost overnight. She was asked to do the opening night of The Montreux Jazz Festival at the Quincy Jones Hall along with Hermetto Pascoal and Margareth Menezes. Because of this memorable performance, Quincy Jones himself came to Diana to praise her after the concert, he could not say enough about her singing and stage 'magic' to all concerned, later reported by the Press.

Montreux Jazz Festival became a turning point in Diana's career. The performance was recorded live on video and on a CD, (her second album). This concert took place in the Miles Davis Hall and her orchestra was composed of different musicians all of whom have a different musical style. These distinguished musicians found a great affinity in this concert, joined together by Diana's magnetism and sheer musical strength. In this album she sings her own version of Chico Buarque and Weather Report, allowing her musicians' creativity to express their own musical emotions which illustrates Diana's individual combination her passion for music.

After this spectacular concert, for the next three years, Diana Miranda toured Europe to promote this album in other major music festivals : Mainz (Germany), Vienna, Moncalvo & Rome (Italy), Lancaster (UK), Gampel (Switzerland), Cannes, (France) The « Ritmos do Mundo Festival » at Porto,(Portugal). During that time, Diana Miranda shared the stage with a variety of great artists
